The question may be asked Why should I seek other services and; What is the reputation of AAHEA?

American Association for Higher Education (AAHEA) is the oldest non-profit association in the United States dedicated to the advancement of higher education.

The AAHEA history began in 1870 when the National Education Association established a department of higher education. AAHEA was incorporated as a self-governing, non-profit organization in the District of Columbia in March 1969.

The AAHEA department of NEA was disbanded in 1924, then reactivated in 1945. In 1958 the department was renamed The Association for Higher Education. In 1968, the NEA voted to move into collective bargaining. The higher education department in turn voted to become an "NEA associated organization." In February 1969 the NEA Board voted not to support the new associated organization and in March 1969 a group of 300 members of the department pledged to take out life memberships in what was now being called AAHEA, to raise funds so the department could continue as an independent organization.

AAHEA flourished and became recognized as a prestigious, scholarly and highly respected institution that provided research, guidance and knowledge to devoted educators in the USA and around the world. AAHE publications and expertise were regarded as state of the art statements of best practices.

American Association for Higher Education (AAHEA) is the largest non-governmental accreditor focusing on secular and religious schools.

The Administration and staff is composed of Professional Educators with many years of related experience with the dedication to see institutions have the support and tools to achieve their institutional goals and fulfills the institutes mission, which leads to a stronger institute and enhanced growth
